

Some things will not stay behind a wall. Fishing is one of them. It has to be free and needs space to spread its wings and fly from one soul to another. Modern fishing has attempted to build walls between those with means and those without. This isn't good for fishermen, fish or our natural resources. Somehow fishing gets over the wall. We share everything we know with just about everyone we meet and build some of our closest relationships with our fishing buddies. Lodges, the fishing banks, flats and fly shops are filled with people who care a lot about each other and can't wait to share their knowledge in a nonjudgmental way. This guerrilla manifesto is for the middle ground. Extremism is supported by the strength of the middle, the tolerant and the trustworthy. The guerilla in this work is the average guy who can't be co-opted by ideology or outside purpose. This angler just wants to go fishing because it's the most relaxing way to be an honorable predator. Like a book, fishing is a box. You can fill it with anything you like. Anything will fit in this box. Fishing is this true Democracy; we don't have to defer our decisions to better judgment. We always have access to the information we need and we know our way to the water. Next time we go we will learn a little more, and so on. The rest of this book is a lot of fun. Like angling, each time you return to read, you'll set your mind in the waters of traditional angling literature. When you're away from fishing, read this book. It is earnest enough to offer you a place to go back to, anytime and anyplace. Enjoy this book and form your own opinion. Build your own box or write your own book. Harry Davis has done this, and left plenty of room on the bank for the rest of us. Jim Murphy Founder Redington Rods and Albright Tackle
