He was a member of the New Hampshire Historical Society and a trustee of Dartmouth College, for which institution he bore a filial regard which he amply and often testified. For several years he maintained a lectureship at his own expense which brought the students in contact with the learned mind of the historian Dr. John Lord. In 1868 he was appointed a member of the board of visitors to the United States Military Academy at West Point, a position which afforded him the keenest pleasure, and by which he became an honored and valued friend of the officers of the institution, which acquaintance was continued up to his death. He was a director in the Great Falls National Bank, a trustee of the Somersworth Savings Bank, and a director of several railroads and corporations. In 1874 he retired from the management of the manufacturing company and resumed the legal profession. He was soon reckoned one of the ablest lawyers in the state, and a brilliant ornament of the New Hampshire bar. His career was characterized in the resolutions offered by the Bar Association in memory of his death, as by his signal ability, varied acquirements, incomparable integrity, generosity and faithfulness, rendered already eminently successful, but which gave promise of higher honors to him, a still more brilliant adornment of the profession, and a future distinguished usefulness to the community. His private life was characterized by generous, almost lavish charities; by a love of the beautiful which adorned his home with all that ministered to such taste, and a love of hospitality which cheerfully welcomed his friends; his versatile pen, his fascinating conversational powers, his mind which...
