

In this significant contribution to both political theory and China studies, Lin Chun provides a critical assessment of the scope and limits of socialist experiments in China, analyzing their development since the victory of the Chinese communist revolution in 1949 and reflecting on the country's likely paths into the future. Lin suggests that China's twentieth-century trajectory be grasped in terms of the collective search by its people for a modern alternative to colonial modernity, bureaucratic socialism, and capitalist subordination. Evaluating contending interpretations of the formation and transformation of Chinese socialism in the contemporary conditions of global capitalism, Lin argues that the post-Mao reform model must be remade.

This is a book that defies easy categorization; it addresses the post-Mao transformation in the People's Republic of China (PRC) introduced by Deng Xiaoping. China's transformation is bound to be open-ended and we must not underestimate the political innovativeness of a Chinese alternative to the capitalist homogenization of the world. The Chinese Communist Party's manifestos continue to state the Party's commitment to the socialist cause. China Review International: Vol. 15, No. 1, Chun Lin.
